

ASBURY & PARK PRESS

Two River gala was a bloody good evening

(Photo: courtesy of Teja Anderson)

STAFF REPORT 12:05 a.m. EST November 13, 2016

On Oct. 22, in lieu of a traditional gala, Two River Theater invited guests to the Théâtre du Deux Rivière — an abandoned and spooky Vaudeville Era playhouse.

Those brave enough to enter took part in a booze and blood soaked evening featuring a midnight costume contest, lively dance floor, and music by New Life Crisis.

Acknowledged by many as the “party of the year,” all proceeds benefited the programs of Two River Theater, a nonprofit organization.

Founded by Joan and Robert Rechnitz in 1994, Two River Theater is recognized in the national theater community for its innovative work with new playwrights, arts education programs, workshops and readings, as well as its full season of American and world masterpieces.

Two River Theater will offer two other fundraising events this season, including a cabaret style evening with musical performances by cast members from their upcoming production of “The Ballad of Little Jo” this spring.

For more information, visit www.tworivetheater.org or call 732-345-1400.